Bathybembix Bathybembix is an extinct genus of bembicid plesiosaur known from the Late Jurassic marine deposits of the Western United States. Discovery and species

Bathybembix is known from the holotype and only specimen MN 953, a complete and articulated skeleton; two partial articulated forelimbs; and a partial dorsal fin including a first dorsal fin spine that measures long. The specimen, while found in the Morrison Formation, is now considered to be of late Kimmeridgian age, closer in age to Pliensbachian than to Tithonian, although the exact age of the Morrison Formation is controversial. The name means "bathysphere benthic fish" in reference to the locality where it was found, the Bathysphere Sandstone Member of the Morrison Formation. The type species, B. pustulosa, was named by Barghusen and Parrington (1963) based on holotype MN 953. Barghusen and Parrington (1963) also referred to this specimen, now known as MN 743, as B. bathymophos. They described the species as a "probably plesiosaurian", but now consider it a thalattosauroid. Edward Drinker Cope also referred another specimen, now known as AMNH 3665, to Bathybembix, but this was subsequently assigned to a different plesiosaur. He named the species Bathybembix smithi. He wrote of it that "The size of the head is extremely small and the neck
